Strategies for Educators Addressing Religious-Based Bullying of Muslim Kids

Educators should implement anti-bullying prevention strategies that address: a whole-school approach; a positive school climate; social-emotional character development (SECD) of students, including promoting upstanders; an emphasis on inclusion; an explicit mention of protected groups in the school’s harassment, intimidation, and bullying (HIB) policy; teacher and staff training pertaining to the prevention of bullying; cultural sensitivity and support for minority students (e.g., faculty sponsorship for clubs or student groups, a recognition of all religious holidays, etc.); and religious literacy and addressing bias and inaccuracies in the curriculum.

1. Teachers should be equipped with anti-bullying training in order to develop the skills necessary to implement a school’s anti-bullying program.

2. Bullying should be effectively managed every time it is reported. This entails compliance with the school’s anti-bullying policy, including investigation and remedies that should be put in place to address the safety of the target if the criteria for bullying have been met.

3. Make sure to address the target of the bullying, reassuring them that they are wanted and should feel safe within the school. Counseling may also be needed depending on the child’s well-being, as well as the severity and persistence of the bullying.

4. Make sure to address the child who bullies to understand what is compelling him/her to act aggressively and to see if counseling may be warranted.

5. Incorporate anti-bullying initiatives into school-based learning on life skills. Ensuring a student’s ability to participate and thrive within the school community must include a focus on anti-bullying work, with specific attention on religious-based bullying and challenging of stereotypes.

6. Teachers should incentivize students to challenge biases.

7. K-12 teachers should ask questions on their introductory surveys at the start of the school year about children’s likes and needs, as well as a faith celebration question.

8. Promote inclusion of individuals with disabilities (e.g., providing a safe quiet space for the child to retreat to when distressed) by embracing each person’s uniqueness and contribution to the school community.
